As a community fund focused on cultivating Asian American philanthropy to support our Asian & Pacific Islanders (APIs) communities in need, APCF is well aware of the challenges that people of color face in this country. Our founding was predicated on the systemic underinvestment of API communities within philanthropy, and we have since worked alongside other community funds and philanthropists of color in "creating a bigger pie" for all underserved communities.

As an institutional member of Asian Americans/Pacific Islanders in Philanthropy (AAPIP), APCF signed onto AAPIP's Statement on Racial Equity in Philanthropy last month, because we stand in solidarity with the Black community and join the clarion call for change.

Many of the issues that API nonprofits advocate share common ground with Black communities, such as affordable housing, environmental justice, violence prevention, living wage, access to healthcare, and restorative justice. As a result, many API nonprofits have long been involved in multiracial coalitions with diverse communities, as they recognize the importance of including API voices in the struggle for a more just society.

While API nonprofits provide life-saving services to our communities in need, they are also often the first to address anti-Blackness in-language and in culturally responsive ways. In the aftermath of the 1992 Los Angeles Civil Unrest, API nonprofits continued to partner with other communities of color including Black leaders and organizations, while simultaneously leading the charge on educating our own communities about the history and current conditions of race relations.

In our role as an API community fund, APCF remains committed to advocating for API nonprofits as we believe they are best positioned to build bridges with the Black community toward a more equitable, just society. In our mission to cultivate Asian American philanthropy, APCF will keep working to unlearn racism and white supremacy while supporting racial solidarity toward a brighter future for us all.

Solidarity Matters!

Purging Anti-Black Racism Toward A Democracy For All
Joint Statement From AAPI CEOs And Trustees In Philanthropy

As AAPI CEOs, Executive Directors, and Trustees in philanthropy, we stand together with our Black colleagues and other allies to commit to the hard but necessary work of peeling back the layers of anti-Black racism within the philanthropic sector and beyond, and in so doing, realize the sector's potential for transformational impact. We do this through our own experiences as AAPIs confronting racism linked to, rather than distinct from, this country's disturbing history of white supremacy. This history begins with the brutal clearing of indigenous peoples from these lands to the remnants of slavery deeply embedded into every system, including, but not limited to the police that continue to sanction the taking of Black lives without impunity. For us, anti-Black racism and anti- Native settler-colonialism, alongside orientalism, are the foundations of white supremacy.

We also recognize that Asian and Black communities have often been pitted against each other, resulting in lose-lose scenarios. As AAPIs, we have a responsibility to acknowledge how we are both harmed by the "model minority" narrative and also how we are complicit in it. We also honor the long history of resisting racism alongside communities of color and we are on a continued learning journey of practicing solidarity. We have much work to do within and across our communities. Following the lead of the Association for Black Foundation Executives \(ABFE\)'s platform on anti-Black racism, we will work in community with our colleagues toward these and other efforts, which may include:

- Deepening of our own learning about Black history within the U.S. to disentangle the roots of systemic racism, including tracing the history of wealth accumulation and its intersection with philanthropy
- Facilitating or participating in discussions with AAPI colleagues and community members about how anti-Blackness hurts AAPI and all communities
- Organizing or participating in jointly inspired programming with Black-led organizations toward dismantling anti-Black racism
- Leveraging our privilege as AAPI leaders to unapologetically center the lived expertise of Black, Latinx, Indigenous, and AAPI communities to transform philanthropic institutions and practices
- Never forgetting that issues of race and gender (including gender identity and sexual orientation) are inextricably intertwined and must always be examined together

Moments of deep pain bring about transformative change. In the coming months, we will be working together to honor the powerful legacy of Black, Indigenous, and Latinx people - inclusive of those who identify as LGBTQ- whose struggles define the heart and soul of this country. We are determined to realize a vibrant democracy that values us all. This journey is still a long one, but we are honored to walk this road with you toward fulfilling our shared humanity.
